CONSTABLES' RETURNS

Edited by Duncan Harrington

In the course of preparing the Kent Hearth Tax Assessment Lady Day 1664,<sup>3</sup> based on the Quarter Sessions return in the Centre for Kentish Studies I consulted and transcribed many of the constables' returns for the county to provide a comparison. It was envisaged, at one stage, that the Quarter Sessions return would be annotated in much the same way that the Hearth Tax for Faversham Hundred 1662-1671 covered every single return for one particular hundred.<sup>4</sup> However, the size of the volume meant that detailed comparison and publication of the various returns was not possible. Some of the returns are printed here to allow readers to make such comparisons for their own areas of interest.

Since the historical basis of the hearth tax, its analysis, contextual and architectural aspects are the subject of study in the forthcoming volume I would ask readers to seek such detail there. The separate assessments for the Cinque Ports were unfortunately not enrolled in the Quarter Sessions return nor in the duplicate sent to the Exchequer. Whilst we cannot be sure a duplicate was ever sent to the Exchequer by John Strode, Lieutenant of Dover Castle and Deputy warden of the Cinque Ports, what we do know is that no duplicate now survives either at the Public Record Office or amongst the Cinque Port records at Dover. So any surviving constable's returns are important. According to J. Bavington Jones much of the early records at Dover were consigned to flames as 'useless records'.<sup>5</sup>

For the Cinque Ports in Kent for the half year 1662 Meekings shows that John Strode was charged in the declared accounts with £376-3-0 for 7523 hearths.<sup>6</sup> A set of figures for the Cinque Ports has survived amongst the state papers for Michaelmas 1662, and provides the following the figures.<sup>7</sup> Deal, 1073 hearths; Dover town and port, 2208; Faversham town, 1156; Folkestone, 238; Hythe (given as 4 wards), 384;

Hythe parish, 16; Lydd town, 365; New Romney town, 388; Ramsgate, 247; the parish, town & port of Sandwich (given as 12 wards), 2033; Sarre, 47; Tenterden town and hundred, 688, and Walmer, 75. The figure for Fordwich town is damaged but looks like one hundred and fifty plus, bringing the total to just over 9000 hearths. Further research amongst the sheriffs' accounts and auditors records in the Public Record Office may show how the numbers of hearths, within the individual ports, vary over the years.<sup>8</sup> What the accounts do show is how difficult John Strode found it to collect the revenue from the Cinque Ports. The mayors and jurats of the ports had, at any one time, at least half the money they should have collected either still in their possession or uncollected, so that by 1671 John Strode was obliged to write off over £900 from the revenue that should have been collected in the 1664-5 period 'in empty houses, by plague, poverty and no distress'.

The transcripts have retained the original spelling throughout, but capitalisation has been modernised, and contemporary contractions extended. Whilst it is hoped that transcription errors have been reduced to a minimum there has occasionally been room for doubt. For example did a surname have two t's or an l and t? Please bear in mind the difficulties of sometimes distinguishing between u, n and v. Some returns have been badly written causing the contemporary scribes who copied these lists either to guess or to impose their own 'standardised' spelling upon the names.

Comparison with the list from the Great Barnfield Hundred with the Quarter Sessions return shows that copying clerks reading down the single column usually placed the entries from left to right in two columns.<sup>9</sup> Readers will note that between the assessment made for the half-year in 1663 and that for Lady Day 1664 whilst the basic order of the list is preserved some people have gone and others are now in what appears to be the same houses if the list is in the same order. In the case of Queenborough<sup>10</sup> although the returns purport to be the same period there are differences and it seems possible that the copying clerk omitted to enter the heading non-chargeable so that 27 hearths were added to the 102 chargeable hearths making the 129 hearths shown in the Quarter Sessions and Exchequer duplicate.
