FAVERSHAM'S ASSESSMENT FOR A SHIP FOR THE COUNTER ARMADA OF 1596: APPENDIX.

Edited by Patricia Hyde and Duncan Harrington

The main article for this topic is to be published in Archaeologia Cantiana Vol. CXXII (2002). What follows is the text of the revised assessment and some biographies and another document relating to the piracy of Abraham Snoode's boat.

In 1596 a large, well equipped Anglo Dutch fleet numbering over 120 vessels sailed for Cadiz carrying 6,000 soldiers. After a three-week voyage and one day's action by sea and by land, the harbour and the town of Cadiz was captured and set on fire. The allies stayed there a fortnight and then sailed for home laden with spoils. <sup>14</sup> The queen was at first delighted, but her mood changed when she heard that her share was to be far less than she had anticipated. Whilst the voyage had fulfilled the original intention there was the nagging possibility that others, not the Crown, had profited from this adventure. The article describes the humble part played by Faversham in this expedition. The town was what is known as a limb of the Cinque Ports under the head port of Dover and was therefore liable to ship service from time to time. In 1587, for example, the ports were expected to pay a cess of £400 to provide a war ship of 50 tons for service against the Dunkirkers. Abraham Snoode (Snothe) and Edward Buddle were to go to London to provide one at a reasonable price.

A year later, when facing the Armada of 1588, Faversham's representatives at the Guestling met 'some uncurteous speaches and harde dealyngs of the townes men of Dovour' Faversham decided to act alone and provide a ship of 40 tons or thereabouts out of the 100 tons imposed upon the Cinque Port of Dover. With the mediation of Richard Barrye, Lieutenant of the castle of Dover, matters were sorted out. We are particularly fortunate that an account has survived that was drawn up by the captain, Nicholas Turner, and the purser, Robert Colwell. In an article entitled The sinews of war: manning and provisioning English fighting ships c. 1550-1650, G.V. Scammell described the problems that lay behind manning such ships. 15 This Faversham account referred to two months wages paid to the following; the captain, £ 8-4-0; the master, £4-0-0; the master's mate; £4-0-0; the master gunner, £ 3-0-0; the gunner's mate, 32s; the gunner's man, 20s; the purser, 32s; the bosun, 32s; the bosun's mate, 24s; the quarter master, 32s; the quarter master's mate, 24s; the steward, 24s; the cook, 24s; the surgeon, 44s; the corporal, 26s 8d; the shipwright, 35s 4d; 5 sailors at 20s each;2 garsons or young men, at 10s each; 4 soldiers at 20s each and a trumpeter at 10s. There were 30 men in all, a number of them known to be seamen in Faversham.<sup>16</sup> For example, the purser, Robert Colwell, and the bosun, John Rockens, both lived in Court Street and were the owners and masters of other ships. 17

In 1580 Abraham Snothe was given as the owner and master of The Ellen (12 tons<sup>18</sup>), a hoy that he still owned in 1586 together with three others, The Peter, The Mary and The Sysse making him then the leading ship owner within the town of Faversham. 19 His father, John, had also been a shipowner living in Court Street. He served many years on the town council and was a churchwarden. He was present at the vital meeting when Thomas Arden was disfranchised and was one of those in charge of Lady Amcott's wharf in 1555. When he made his will in 1573, he left half his hoy The Margaret to Abraham on condition that'he shall keep house with my wife his mother, bear half the charge of household and also keep half the necessary reparations of the said hoy and be obedient toward his mother.' If Abraham did not carry out his instructions, then his wife was to have that half as well.

A series of bonds in October 1585 give Abraham's ornate merchant mark and show the problem of ship names in that both William Ladd and Clement Trowtes have a hoy called The Peter of Faversham.<sup>20</sup> From various assessments and the muster rolls we know that Abraham lived in Court Street Faversham.21 In the muster rolls he is described sometimes as a mariner, sometimes as a man capable of handling a caliver, the standard firearm for much of the period. He was later promoted to be a decimer or leader of ten soldiers. The point is that mariners were not always mentioned as such in the muster rolls.

Snothe appears to have made his money shipping wheat and other commodities to London and returning with other wares. It is possible to find some record of these trips from the Faversham Port books. For instance on the 28 April 1580, Abraham Snothe master, had left the Port of Faversham in The Ellen of Faversham (burden 12 tons) bound for London with eighty quarters of wheat belonging to John Philipott. He returned on the 14 May 1580 from London with the following goods belonging to Christopher Bridge, denizen of Canterbury: "three trusses containing six frizeadoes, eight remnants of broad cloth, one remnant baies, four kerses, three remnant and ten cottones, thirty barrels soap, one hogshead Gascogne wine, three baskets orrenges and habberdashe wares, three small cases with sylke and mercery wares and six barrels of pitch and tarre."22 We also find Abraham shipping his own merchandize on other hoys. In all, he made 11 voyages to London and back in 1580 as well as 2 to Ireland.

In 1572, Snothe gave 3<sup>s</sup> 4<sup>d</sup> towards the building of the Market House, which eventually became the Guildhall. He was also involved in two court cases that give us just a glimpse of everyday life. In the first, he gave a deposition in a case concerning Lewes Larder, who was charged with piracy and robbery. In his deposition Snothe said that, on the instructions of one Crosse, a merchant of London, he had unloaded four vats of copperas<sup>23</sup> and a great deal of dried fish from Larder's bark to send them to London. A dispute then arose between Crosse and Larder's men and Snothe had to put all the goods back again. A week later Crosse contacted him again and asked him to collect the goods. Larder's bark was by now lying in the Downs. This time Snothe collected the copperas and two packs of wax and took them to Faversham. Snothe did not know where the wax had been shipped to, but he still had custody of the copperas.

Seven years later he was involved in a case of withernam. This was a legal process which was used in the recovery of debts incurred between inhabitants of different Cinque Ports, London and other English boroughs. Snothe claimed that John Hale or Hall of Breadstreet ward in the city of London owed him £3-13-4. He said that Hall had retained him on 24 September 1579 to take malt and rye in his hoy to East Swale and there to hand it over to the master of a London crayer. This he did, and that accounted for £3-6-8. Hall also bought 13 straw mats from Snothe, which came to  $6^s \, 8^d$ .

And we find amongst the High Court of Admiralty records an examination of witnesses in 1587 concerning the piracy committed about The Peter of Faversham when Andrew Clerke was master and Abraham Snothe was the owner. From them we learn of the cargo being carried for the Canterbury merchants and the way in which the perpetrators were caught. The examinations are of sufficient interest for them to be fully extracted in appendix I of this account. It would be interesting to know whether 'the very cards and marks of direction' was simply a nautical way of saying that they were caught with details of what goods were to be delivered to whom; or a particular description of the merchants marks on the barrels and details of destination.

In his will dated 18 October 1593, Snothe made arrangements to help two of 'my brother Taylor's' sons. Thomas was to receive £5-0-0 a year until the age of 21 if 'he dothe so longe contynue at Cambridge' and £20-0-0 when he reached the age of 21. Abraham was to be kept by his wife, the executrix, until he could be 'putt to prentice to some good occupation', and he also was to receive £20-0-0 at 21. His son-in-law, John Lawrence, was to have all Snothe's part of the hoy called The Ellen of Faversham and one of his lighters on condition that he paid one Barbara Adye £6-0-0 a year and £60 due to her under the will of her father, &lt;sup>23</sup> Copperas; proto-sulphate of iron or ferrous sulphate (FeSO<sub>4</sub>) also called green vitriol, used in dyeing, tanning and making ink. See W. H. George, A short account of the copperas industry of the Isle of Sheppey, Kent, (1983) and R. H. Goodsall, 'The Whitstable Copperas Industry', Archaeologia Cantiana (1957), lxx, pp. 142-159.

Nicholas Adye. This sum Snothe had had from Adye's executors. His wife was to enter into a bond with sufficient surety with the town within three months.

He also arranged that his executrix should glaze one of the windows on the east side of the Free School at Faversham, which had just been built. He granted his wife for life a house that he had just bought. After her death, it was to go to his son-in-law, John Lawrence. He then left a gold ring, which he wore daily, to his good friend, Nicholas Upton. Almost as an afterthought, he finished with 'Item I will my wyfe shall give unto the poore where she shall think most needfull'.<sup>24</sup>

OTHER LOCAL MEN LINKED WITH THE HAZARDE<sup>25</sup>

JAMES BACON the cook was paid 24s. He appeared as a mariner living in Court Street from 1591 onwards. By 1598 he owned the hoy The Watt then The Mayflower, taking malt, wheat and hides to London.

THOMAS BRATTE a soldier paid 20s. He lived in West Street from 1583 onwards. In the muster rolls, considered capable of using a musket from 1591.

EDWARD BUDDLE, co-owner and master of The Hazarde, was paid £4. By 1585 he was co-owner and master of the hoy The Maryflower. It is not certian whether this is the same Edward Buddell described as a sailor of Margate whose testimony is recorded in the High Court of Admiralty records in 1583, when he says, "that abowte shrovetide laste on borde captayne Arnolde at Margate where he laye in his man of warre Also Capayne Gore was in that roade on whom this examinant was also on borde and more pirattes shippe he was not on borde." 26

JOHN BULL a soldier paid 20s. John was the son and servant of a leading figure, Nicholas Bull. They lived first in Court Street and later in Preston Street.

EDWARD BYLLTON a shipwright paid 35/4. Edward was mentioned as a shipwright and a servant of Thomas Lewes in the muster roll of 1588.

ROBERT COLWELL the purser paid 32s. Colwell was part of an established family and lived in West Street In 1580, at the age of 16, he was apprenticed to Thomas Bennett, owner and master of The Olyfaunte of 12 tons. By 1586 he was the master of The Trinity owned by John Trowtes. In 1591 he was living in Court Street and by 1596 was the owner of a bark called The John of 50 tons. 1606 case against a shipbuilder.

WILLIAM COSEN a soldier paid 20s. By 1580 he was a servant of a jurat called Thomas Oldfield and living in Abbey Street. He later served Mistress

Ambrose. He was still on the muster roll in 1596 with his equipment of bill, skull and red cap.

FOWLER DERELOVE the steward paid 24s. He was a servant of the jurat Thomas Oldfield in 1570, but had moved to John Castlock by 1573. He lived in Court Street In 1588 in the muster roll he used a caliver provided by John Castlock and in 1590 was furnished with musket shot provided by Mr. Thomas Finch.

EDWARD FREEMEN the quartermasters mate paid 24s. In 1580 he was an apprentice aged 16 to John Michell, the owner and master of a little ketch called The Bobtail of 8 tons. By 1583-4 he was living in Court Street, a servant of John Rockyns. By 1596 he himself owned a 30 ton hoy called The Mary. By 1598 his 12 ton hoy The Jane made several trips to London carrying wheat, malt and hops.

JAMES FRYKYN the quarter master paid 32s. He came from Whitstable and had a hoy Elizabeth Anvild by 1598, carrying wheat and malt to London, returning with assorted wares.

JOHN ROCKYNS the bosun paid 32s. He was the son of John Rockyns of Court Street, who was said to be old in 1580. In 1586 he was master of the hoy The Gift of God under the owner George Bennett. In 1599 he owned the hoy The Ellen with Hugh Nethersole.

RICHARD TODDYE a sailor paid 20s. He was mentioned as a mariner in the muster roll in 1588 He had a hoy of 12 tons with James Bacon in 1599

ROGER WALTON a sailor paid 20s. He was on the muster roll in Court Street in 1591

CHRISTOPHER WARRENER the gunners mate paid 32s. In 1580, aged 16, he was an apprentice on the hoy The John belonging to John Trowtes. By 1583 he was a servant of the mariner, Robert Rye, who was getting old. Eight years later, in 1591, he was a servant of Abraham Snothe and by 1596 he was the owner of the hoy The Abraham. Two years later he was trading in the hoy The Martha.

And what happened to the accounts for provisioning The Vineyard and to the collection of the cess? The four collectors presented the first part of the account 'for the charges of our part in setting forth of a ship called The Vineyard'. They had paid wages of 10 shillings each to 8 men for unspecified work. They had also paid 1 shilling each for 45 soldiers and 11 marines pressed into service to go to Dover. Sailors were sometimes included in the muster rolls at Faversham. A more detailed list in 1602 said; "Give them (the sailors) twelve pence for imprest money and after the rate of a half-penny the myle for their conduct..."
